

HOW SOME WIVES GO TO SLEEP.

Revelations by a Man Who Once Was Single.

There is an article going the rounds entitled, "How the Girls Go To Sleep." The manner in which they go to sleep, according to the article, can't hold a candle to the way married women go to sleep.

Instead of thinking what she should have attended to before going to bed, she thinks of it afterward. While she is revolving these matters in her mind, and while snugly tucked up in bed, the old man is scratching his head in front of the fire and wondering how he will pay the next month's rent.

Suddenly she exclaims:
"James, did you lock the door?"
"What door?" says James.
"The collar door," says she.

"No," says James.
"Well, you had better go down and lock it, for I heard some one in the back yard last night."

Accordingly James paddles down the stairs and locks the door.

About the time James returns and is going to bed she remarks:
"Did you shut the stair door?"

"No," says James.
"Well, if it is not shut the cat will get up into the chamber."

"Let her come up, then," says James, ill-naturedly.

"My goodness, no!" returns his wife; "she'd suck the baby's breath."

Then James paddles down stairs again and steps on a tack, and closes the stair door, and speaks to himself of the cat, and returns to the bedroom.

Just as he begins to climb into his couch his wife observes:
"I forgot to bring up some water. Suppose you bring up some in the big tin."

And so James, with a muttered soliloquy, goes down into the dark kitchen and falls over a chair and raps all the tinware off the wall in search of the "tin," and then jerks the stair door open and howls:

"Where the deuce are the matches?" She gives him minute directions where to find the matches, and adds that she would rather go and get the water herself than have the whole neighborhood raised about it; after which James finds the matches, procures the water, and comes up stairs and plunges into bed.

Presently his wife says:
"James, let's have an understanding about money matters. Now, next week I've got to pay—"

"I don't know what you'll have to pay and don't care," shouts James, as he hurries around and jangles his face against the wall. "All I want is sleep."

"That's all very well for you," enaps his wife, as she pulls the covers viciously; "you never think of the work and trouble I have. And there is Araminta, who I believe is taking the measles."

"Let her take 'em," says James. Hereupon she begins to cry softly, but about the time James is falling into a gentle sleep she punches him in the ribs with her elbows and says:

"Did you hear the scandal about Mrs. Jones?"

"Where?" says James sleepily.
"Why, Mrs. Jones."
"Where?" inquires James. "You are getting more stupid every day. You know Mrs. Jones that lives at 21? Well, day before yesterday Susan Smith told Mrs. Thompson that Sam Barker had said that Mrs. Jones had—"

Here she paused and listened. James is snoring in profound slumber.

With a snort of rage she pulls all the covers off him, wraps up in them, and lies awake until 2 A. M. thinking how badly used she is.

And this is the way some married women go to sleep.

George Washington's Awful Razor.
A lady residing at Peoria, Ill., has in her possession the razor used by George Washington. The Saturday Evening Call of that city thus describes it:

"The razor consists of a blade about six inches long, an inch and a quarter wide, with a very thick back, and a handle composed of wood on one side and bone on the other. It is heavy enough to cut a chicken's head off at one blow, and looks as if it might also be made useful as a butcher's cleaver. The art of making hollow-ground razors was apparently unknown in the days of the illustrious George."

"On looking at the implement and contemplating the torture that must have followed the daily use of it, one can no longer wonder at the firmly-set mouth, and the look of resolution that is apparent in every line of the hero's face as portrayed on the national postage stamp. He acquired that aspect of indomitable and unconquerable fortitude while using this same razor."

"How any man with a skin of less toughness than leather itself could ever use it is a mystery. Go and see that weapon and reflect upon the adamantine bravery that the great leader of the Continental armies possessed, of which history makes no mention whatever. To face death in the shock of battle is comparatively easy, but to submit one's self to being skinned alive daily is really the ordeal that is calculated to test the stuff of which a man is made."

Canada's Military Forces.
Canada's army consists of a military force of 36,000 men, not including the reserve militia. The force is sometimes spoken of as volunteers, sometimes as militia, but there is in reality no such difference.

The force is essentially a volunteer force, composed of civilians from the towns and country, who are raised in the former being called "city corps" and in the latter "rural corps." The amount of drill required by the Militia act for each man is about 16 days in two years.

Many of the rural corps are not called out annually, and do no more drill than that required of them, while the city corps resemble much the volunteer corps of our large towns at home, and drill annually as arranged by their commanding officer.

The men receive 50 cents (2s.) a day for authorized drill. They are armed with the Snider rifle.

In addition to her militia, Canada possesses a regular force enlisted as soldiers, and distributed in schools throughout the different provinces for purposes of instruction, and composed as follows:

Two schools of artillery, one at Quebec, one at Kensington, each possessing two field guns, 3-pounder R. M. L.; a cavalry school at Port Lewis, Quebec; and three infantry schools, viz., at Toronto, St. John, Province of Quebec, and Fredericton, New Brunswick. The total strength of all schools combined cannot, by the Militia act, exceed 750 men.—[The United Service.]
